Serviceberry are usually grown as small, multi-stemmed tree that are quite ornamental. They can also be grown as a single stem as a medium-sized accent tree. They produce small, blueberry-like purple-black fruit that is a favorite of birds, after a profusion of white blooms in spring. The fall color is a brilliant red that is early in the season. It prefers well-drained soil, but can tolerate wide variety of conditions. It can also be grown in its natural state as a windbreak or screen, and is an excellent plant to attract wildlife to your property.
